It is well understood that it is critical for children with complex trauma to receive treatment early in their lives, before their symptoms reach an apex necessitating hospitalization, residential placement, or ruptured home placements. Dissociation in children is often misunderstood or unrecognized due to the complex array of symptoms, and, consequently, many commonly known interventions are ineffective, so that the child and family are left feeling greater despondency. This seminar offers additional interventions that will expand the therapist's toolbox when the treatment gets stuck because of the impact of the trauma history.

This workshop will focus on specialized, creative and effective treatment techniques utilizing play therapy that alleviate the traumatized child's symptoms, while attending to the dissociation and trauma, and helping the child become an integrated self. The presentation will show a three-phase treatment that encompasses identification of self-states roles, building of internal co-consciousness, cooperation among parts of the self, ego strengthening and stabilization. Trauma processing and integration will be described within the context of play and family therapy. Other techniques, for example, EMDR, will be incorporated within this context.

Case examples of two young children with significant dissociation will highlight the treatment process utilizing family and play therapy. Special attention will be given to working with the family, to repair attachment disturbances and ameliorate aggressive and destructive behaviors, with the goal of integrating the child. Videos and artwork will depict intervention techniques.

Objectives

1. Identify child's dissociative states using play therapy
2. Learn how to build internal communication using play therapy
3. Learn latest creative play therapy interventions for treatment of childhood dissociation and comorbid symptoms.
4. Understand how to stabilize the dissociative child using play therapy.
5. Learn how to engage family in play therapy with dissociative child.
6. Learn play therapy techniques for trauma processing.
7. Learn play therapy techniques for integration.

Preliminary Seminar — Laying the Foundation

The highly recommended preliminary webinar, “Dissociation & Complex Trauma: Creative Treatment Techniques in Play Therapy — An Essential Introductory Seminar,” will be available on 3 upcoming dates. The presentation will build on the basic but essential information that was covered in this earlier presentation, therefore, we are offering it as an online webinar on three dates: Friday, August 17; Saturday, September 15; and Monday, October 29. The August and September replays will be 9:15-2:30 AM ET, and the October replay will be in the evening, 5:00-10:15 PM ET. Please go to fptcenter.com to see the brochure. The introductory seminar includes a 100 page power point and a valuable 4 page behavior list to help therapists begin to identify when dissociation is a problem. It also presents two case studies on the often overlooked area of dissociation connected with medical trauma.

Sample Feedback from the Introductory Seminar
